Session Summary

The party began their journey in Tre Coedwig, a dwarven village, where they experienced an uneventful night despite previous tensions from suggestion magic used on the dwarves. Kroc-gar, a lizardfolk warlock, completed a carving ritual for protective runes using a piece from a defeated dryad. The next morning, the tavern was sparsely populated with dwarf loggers who cast disapproving looks at the party, and Kroc-gar was denied meat by the tavern keeper, leading him to eat his own rations. Jexim, a cleric, also sought meat but was similarly denied, while Sorn, a wood elf ranger, consumed oatmeal without issue.

The party discussed the shops in Tre Coedwig, noting the general outfitter and Twigs' Knot Your Average Magic Shop. They confirmed that Voshtai at Siorlann, the headquarters of the Cailleotairi faction, had previously refused them mounts, leaving Jexim's donkey, Charlie, in the capital. After resupplying, they departed for Aite-Briethe. At the outfitter, Jexim purchased materials for crafting crossbow bolts. As they left, Marcus, a dwarf guard leader, threatened them, and Kallista, a tiefling, responded with hostility.

As they traveled, the party noted signs of recovery in Fossmore Forest, observing growth and repairs to the palisade. They deviated eastward into the forest, where they discovered luminous fungus and experienced a wild magic effect. After establishing camp, the weather abruptly shifted to winter, causing Sorn to suffer exhaustion. Jexim detected strong magic to the north and encountered an old woman, the Frosted Crone, who vanished into motes of light. The party found a gruesome corpse of a wood elf, suggesting cannibalism, and triggered a trap that released arrows.

Continuing onward, they entered an area of auditory illusions that caused fear among some members. The party reached a pond with a Singing Lotus and heard Elvish singing. They were confronted by a disembodied voice that questioned their intentions and expressed hunger. The party debated their options for crossing the pond while maintaining a defensive posture, aware of the potential for conflict with the unseen presence ahead. The session concluded with the path behind them sealed by vines and the Singing Lotus before them, setting the stage for a tense standoff ahead.

MOMENT

The Frosty Woman's Vanishing

The trio followed a newly revealed path when an old woman in tattered rags appeared, exuding an eerie chill. Her piercing blue eyes locked onto Jexim, and she smiled as icicles dangled from her face. She vanished behind a tree, and the cold turned to warmth. Jexim clutched his chest, urgently stating, "We need to get the hell out of here." The haunting image of the frost-laden woman lingered in his mind.

MOMENT

Vines and a Hunger for Home

Thorny vines block the party's escape as an Elvish voice from the north reveals that Aite-Briethe, once a sanctuary, is now corrupted. The voice states, "Harm or no harm matters not. I hunger. To feed is your lot," ignoring Jexim's question about the flayed wood elf. The party must choose to confront the threat or find another way, feeling the weight of their choices. "To feed is your lot."

MOMENT

Marcus's Parting Threat

As the sun set, the party left Tre Coedwig, confronted by Marcus, the dwarf guard leader, who spat, "Good riddance to bad rubbish, you Cailleotairi! Don't return to our village." Kallista glared at him, anger palpable. The party felt the tension as they turned to leave, reminded of the animosity behind them. The encounter warned of dangers ahead.

Encounter with the Frosted Crone

- Jexim detected strong magic to the north and followed a new path.
- The party saw an old woman, the Frosted Crone, who vanished into motes of light.
- The scene returned to summer after her disappearance.

Confrontation at the Singing Lotus

- The party reached a pond with a Singing Lotus and heard Elvish singing.
- A disembodied voice questioned their intentions and expressed hunger.
- The path behind them was sealed by thorny vines, limiting their options.

Key Entities

Tre Coedwig: Served as the starting point for the party's journey, where they experienced tensions with local dwarves.

Cailleotairi: The faction that Voshtai belongs to, which previously refused the party mounts.

The Winter Crone: An old woman encountered by the party who vanished into motes of light.

Knot Your Average Magic Shop: Was noted by the party as a potential resource for supplies in Tre Coedwig.

Fossmore Forest: The forest where the party traveled and encountered various magical phenomena.

Singing Lotus: A magical flower at the center of a pond that the party approached during their journey.

Kroc-gar

Completed a carving ritual for protective runes using a piece from a defeated dryad. He foraged spicy herbs around camp to season and cook a squirrel for the party.

- Carved protective runes into a piece from a defeated dryad.
- Cooked a squirrel that tasted exceptionally good.

Jexim

Sensed strong magic beyond his range and reported it to the party. He also crafted crossbow bolts during downtime and translated Elvish song lyrics for the group.

- Performed a ritual Detect Magic and sensed strong magic to the north.
- Crafted 8 crossbow bolts from purchased supplies.

Sorn

Took point in navigating through Fossmore Forest and suffered exhaustion due to the sudden winter. He also triggered wild magic while hunting a squirrel, becoming invisible for a short time.

- Led navigation through the forest undergrowth.
- Hunted a squirrel while suffering from exhaustion and triggered wild magic.

NOTABLE ITEMS

Item	Description
Crossbow Bolt Materials	Materials purchased by Jexim sufficient to craft 20 crossbow bolts for later use.
Squirrel Meat	A squirrel hunted by Sorn and cooked by Kroc-gar, providing sustenance for the party.
Alchemist's Fire	A potential resource discussed by Jexim for burning through the vine wall if needed.
Protective Runes	Runes carved by Kroc-gar from a defeated dryad, intended for protective purposes.
Luminous Fungus	A magical growth discovered by the party that imparted a wild magic effect.

Valuable Information

1. The party noted that Tre Coedwig had experienced tensions due to suggestion magic used on the dwarves.
2. The Cailleotairi faction had previously refused the party mounts, leaving them without transportation.
3. The Frosted Crone vanished into motes of light after appearing to the party.
4. The corpse of a wood elf found by the party suggested cannibalism rather than beast attacks.
5. The trap triggered by the party was made from coaxed plant growth rather than hand-built construction.
6. The Singing Lotus was associated with a disembodied Elvish voice that expressed hunger.
7. The path behind the party was sealed by rapidly growing vines, limiting their escape options.

Party Status

The party is currently in Fossmore Forest, having established camp after encountering various magical phenomena. They are wary of potential threats and have experienced a sudden shift in weather conditions.

- Sorn is suffering from exhaustion due to the cold weather.
- The path behind them is sealed by thorny vines, restricting their movement.
- Jexim has detected strong magic to the north, indicating potential danger.

Next Steps

The party intends to navigate toward the Singing Lotus while assessing the situation for potential conflict.
